Suella orders review on extremists as police law of clamp down on requirement as police

100 PROTESTERS
ARE ARRESTED

by Sam Lister

Flashpoint: Police at the West Bank. (AP)

On Saturday night, the Minister of Internal Affairs declared that there were no reasons to arrest anyone in the area, but the police went on to say that they would continue their operations in the West Bank.

By Sam Lister

Prime Minister Boris Johnson told the House of Commons that the government would clamp down on extremism and bring in new laws to prevent it from spreading.

Johnson said that the government would be taking immediate action to tackle the problem.

The Prime Minister
announced that a new law would be introduced to stop extremists from spreading their views.

The move comes after a series of attacks on Jewish and Muslim communities in the UK.

Johnson said that the new law would be introduced in the coming weeks.

The Prime Minister
promised to do everything in his power to stop extremism from spreading.

The move has been
welcomed by many members of Parliament.

But some members of
the Labour Party have
criticised the government
for not doing enough to stop
extremism.

In response, the Prime Minister said that the government was taking
steps to tackle the
problem.

He said that the
new law would be
introduced in
the coming weeks.

The move has been
done to stop extremism
from spreading.

But some members of
the Labour Party have
criticised the government
for not doing enough to stop
extremism.

In response, the Prime Minister said that the
government was taking
steps to tackle the
problem.

He said that the
new law would be
introduced in
the coming weeks.

The move has been
done to stop extremism
from spreading.

But some members of
the Labour Party have
criticised the government
for not doing enough to stop
extremism.

In response, the Prime Minister said that the
government was taking
steps to tackle the
problem.

He said that the
new law would be
introduced in
the coming weeks.

The move has been
done to stop extremism
from spreading.